Understanding our Kids Triggers and Responses

Every child experiences the world differently—what deeply affects one may not even register for another. Their reactions to challenges vary just as much. My job is to help them navigate those moments, transforming overwhelming emotions into manageable ones, so they feel empowered instead of helpless.

But sometimes, before I can do that, I need to calm myself first—step outside, take a deep breath, and reset—so I don't spill my own unregulated emotions onto them. Because the best way to guide a child through their storm is to make sure I'm not caught in one myself!

Learning in Kea:

It's been a busy couple of weeks in Kea, with learning in full swing in Term 2.

In preparation for the 4th of May, Kea class had a construction session. They repurposed lots of collected cardboard items to create accessories for their costumes. There were plenty of very imaginative items made.

Later in the week we went on our Marae trip where we sang, enjoyed some games outside in the sunshine, knuckle bones was a huge hit with many, getting speedier with each attempt. We designed and made our own waka huia.

A huge thanks to Mrs Strong for organising such a magic day out!
